For some people, there is no greater pleasure than settling on a comfortable chair, cracking the stiff spine of a new book and diving blindly into another world. Books open up endless possibilities and pleasure, but unfortunately reading is a pastime in which fewer people are involved. If you're like a large percentage of Americans, you haven't picked up a book at all this year, and it's even likelier that if you don't, you haven't finished it. Polls published by the Associated Press and Ipsos show that one in four Americans do not read books at all, and half of Americans read less than four a year. Although the decrease in reading time is sad, our declining reading capacity is sadder. According to the Oxford Journals, the average reading ability of Americans hovers around eighth or ninth grade, and the UN Chronicle reports that up to 25 million citizens cannot read or write at all. The United States is 21st in the world in literacy. Number one in terms of nationwide literacy? Cuba. What's even more frightening is that, according to a report published by Renaissance Learning, the average reading capacity of our high school graduates is at fifth grade level. The benefits of reading In today's hectic world, collecting a book may seem like it's not worth the time. However, reading offers countless benefits: 1. Reading uses the brain The average American spends five and a half hours each day watching TV. While television can be fun, it's not much for the brain or for the body. In fact, you burn more calories by reading a book than you watch TV. Reading is an active mental process: you think more, use your imagination and increase your knowledge. 2. Reading expands your worldview Never walked around a dusty village in Mali. I wasn't born into indian plains life in the 1800s. I never trudged along the rainy, dark streets of Paris with a hungry belly and nothing in my pocket except a notebook and a blunt pencil to write my next story. However, I experienced all these things through the magic and mystery of books. Books allow you to experience other people, other places and other cultures that you may never be exposed to in ordinary life. It helps develop compassion for suffering, empathy for those who are different from you, and an open mind. 3. Build Focus Books When you read a magazine, you jump from photos to captions to history, page by page. When you read your site, you're constantly distracted by moving ads and links to your next site or story. While every reading is beneficial, books help develop the ability to focus and concentrate, because there is no distraction - there is only history. Also helps improve memory. 4. Reading makes you interesting in the world's brightest, most creative minds have written books, sharing their wisdom, all of which are just waiting for you to get up and discover. The more you read, the more you need to talk to colleagues, friends, dating, spouse or partner and complete strangers. Reading gives you a rich store of knowledge, ideas and experiences that you can then share with others. 5. Reading helps you learn how to start a business by reading books. I learned yoga, Buddhism, American history, mythology, and many other fascinating topics through reading. Reading is a very cheap way to learn new skills and concepts. Instead of attending classes and paying inflated tuition, or instead of wishing you knew how to build a blog or software software, learn through books. Reading gives you responsibility for your education, no matter how young or old you are. How to read more sitting down to read doesn't mean you need to carve an hour or more of the day. There are many ways you can smuggle more reading into your life: 1. Cancel cable TV I canceled cable TV years ago, and I must say I didn't miss it a bit. Watching less TV is a very easy way to open up time to read more. I often use the evening to read, and this is my favorite part of the day. If I still had a cable, I could otherwise flip the channel around the channel looking for something to watch. 2. Invest in a tablet device According to a Pew Research study published in NBC News, 30% of survey respondents who own a tablet or e-reader say they spend more time reading than they used to. They also read more books: The average tablet owner reads 24 books a year, compared to other readers who read an average of 15 books a year. I own an Amazon Kindle and I love it. One of the biggest benefits of owning a Kindle is that Amazon has thousands of books, the vast majority of them classics, available for free download. This is a very easy and cheap way to get fast and portable access to the best books in the world. Another advantage of e-readers is that they are small. You can take the entire library with you by plane, train or purse. You can read during your morning commute to work when you're queuing up at a grocery store or waiting to pick up your kids from school. E-readers make it easy to fill small pockets of reading time instead of aimlessly staring into space or checking Twitter on your smartphone. 3.

Choose books or genres that interest you Do you know how many times I have picked up War and Peace and tried to read it? At least a dozen. This is one of those books I feel like I should have read, but I've never been able to get into history no matter how hard I've tried. Sometimes you're just not ready for a book or the book isn't ready for you. You may not be old, or you are not at the right time in your life. You may not be doomed to cross paths at all – and that's fine. So don't make yourself read a book you're not interested in just because you feel you should read it. Read. with books that interest you - you will get more pleasure and value from your experience. If you feel sick, you don't do yourself any favors. 4. Set the time If you have a really tight schedule, you will probably have to postpone the time to read. And that means you'll put it on your schedule or choose a specific time of day. Even if it's only 10 or 15 minutes, it will still be a good way to develop a habit, help you relax and allow you to forget about the stresses of everyday life in a healthy way for a while. Try reading on your lunch break, or wake up earlier than everyone else and read when you have a morning cup of coffee. You can also try reducing internet time in the evening - there are some amazing readings available online, but the web can also be really distracting. Reading to children after dinner or bedtime will help them develop a love of reading and allow you to read more. 5. Read with others Reading with children is a wonderful way to teach them the love of reading. But reading with others, such as with friends or as part of a book club, can also be a rewarding and motivating way to read more. There are even online book clubs you can join. These clubs expose you to books you may not have heard of, and also give you the opportunity to discuss what you have read and learned with others. These discussions and opinions can also give you a better understanding of the books and their characters. The final reading of a word should be a joy, not a duty. Books are full of magic and mystery, and if you're not used to reading regularly, it can be hard to use at first. But don't stop. Pick up the book and find time to read during the day. If it's not a good book or if it doesn't bring you pleasure, stop reading it! You certainly don't have to finish every book you start. What other strategies do you use to add more reading time to the day? As the world's largest publisher of books for young readers, Scholastic is at the top of the list for aspiring children's authors whose goal is to publish. The company publishes books from well-known and new writers, so you don't need achievements to win a book deal. Bad news? Submitting a manuscript will require an agent unless you are a practicing teacher. Scholastic, like most large publishers, accepts submissions through agents rather than aspiring authors. The only exception is if you are a teacher who wants to submit a manuscript in the category scholastic professional books. This program publishes between 80 and 100 titles per year on specific teaching methods, often based on research conducted in the author's class. Manuscripts in four thematic areas are accepted: Teaching Strategies, Textbooks, Grades 4-8 Books and the Scholastic Reference Library. The site explains what scholastic is looking for in Category. Submit a typed, filled manuscript by mail to the Application Editor, Scholastic Scholastic Resources, 557 Broadway, New York, NY 10012. Be sure to keep a copy of the manuscript, as Scholastic will not return your request. Since the company accepts applications only from teachers and teachers, you must include a resume, biography, or other evidence of relevant teaching experience. Scholastic also accepts teaching ideas or positions for its Professional Books program. To upload a pitch, compile a typed description of your idea, a sample of the actions you'll include, the level of class you're targeting, and a table of contents showing the layout of your book. Scholastic would also like to review the sample chapter. Send paper documents to the Upload Editor with resume and samples of other published works, if any. The editor will review your manuscript or pitch based on the originality of the ideas, how useful your book is for working teachers, how well it fits into the Scholastic Professional Books program and whether the company thinks the book will sell. Don't worry if you don't get an answer for a while. Scholastic receives a huge number of manuscripts and can take about 24 to 30 weeks to respond. Scholastic does not accept unsolicited requests from authors. Instead, you need to find an agent that represents you, which can be difficult if you haven't been published before. As a starting point, check out the current version of Children's Writer's and Illustrator's Market. This book contains more than 500 listings for literary agents, publishers and children's book markets and is considered a Bible for children's writers whose purpose is to get published. The book sells for about $20 or you should find it in your local library. Once you find the right person to represent you, your agent will send the book to Scholastic for you and negotiate a deal if it sells. Sells.
